PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

This revised edition of the Shan-English Dictionary was prepared principally by Dr. Cushing, but others have done a great deal of work on it. Many words have been added and some definitions have been slightly changed.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

The aim of this Dictionary is to place before the student the colloquial language of that division of the Tai family known as the Shan or Burman Shan. The pronunciation common in the principalities of Laihka and Möngnai has been taken as a standard.

During the passage of this book through the press, several words were omitted accidentally and a few new ones were collected. These words appear in the Appendix.

J. N. CUSHING.

Rangoon, January, 1881.

INTRODUCTION.

1. The Tai family of languages is spoken by several millions of people who inhabit the plateaux of the broad, mountainous belt of country, which sweeps around from the Assamese border easterly and southerly, between Burma and Anam to the Gulf of Siam. The branches of the family are the Khamti, Chinese Shan (Tai Mow), Shan, Laos, and Siamese. To these should be added the now extinct language of the Ahom, who were once the conquerors of Assam. The Khamti is spoken in the extreme north of Burma about the Upper Irrawaddy and its branches. The Chinese Shan is used in the many small principalities which lie east and northeast of Bhamo and are tributary to China. The Shan or Burman Shan, as it is sometimes called, is employed by the people who inhabit the territory lying between the mountains east of the great Burman plain and the Cambodia River, and between the 19th and 23rd parallels of north latitude. Both the Khamtis and Shans are under the Government of Burma. The Laos is spoken throughout the country situated between the Salwen and Cambodia Rivers and between the 19th parallel of north latitude and the northern boundary of the kingdom of Siam. The government is tributary to Siam, but is independent in the administration of internal affairs. The Siamese, which does not differ widely from the Laos as a spoken language, is co-extensive with the kingdom of Siam.

Divisions of the Tai family of languages.

All these different branches of the Tai family have separate alphabets, which are, with the exception of the Siamese, more or less related in form.

These five divisions may be formed into two groups, which are more widely dissimilar to each other than the individual members of each group are dissimilar one to another. They may be arranged thus; —

At Hotha, one of the Chinese Shan principalities, the language spoken seems to be Chinese Shan with a large mixture of a foreign element. On investigation it may be proved that the Hotha Shans are really Shanized descendants of a race occupying the territory of Hotha at the time of the irruption of the Tai family from the north.

Dictionary based on the Shan colloquial.

2. This Dictionary embraces the vocabulary in colloquial use among the Shans. In the Shan books which have been examined words have been found that are never used in the spoken form of the language. These words have been indicated by (b.). Doubtless many more words of this kind exist in books yet unexamined, but they are of no practical importance to the student who is only desirous of acquiring a colloquial use of the language. These words may have been in common use formerly, but have become obsolete except in books, or they may have come into use simply to supply wants arising from the peculiar rythmical style in which all the native books are written. If they are really obsolete words, probably they would afford much assistance to the comparative philologist.

Dialects.

3. The Shan as spoken in Laihka and Möngnai has been taken as the standard of pronunciation. Dialectic differences exist in several localities, but they are of no great importance.

The most noticeable dialects are the ၶုၼ်, Khün. 1c, at Kengtung and the လိၵ်, Lü, 5c, at Kenghong, principalities east of the Salwen, where the Laos influence has been very strong. In these principalities a slightly modified form of the Laos alphabet is used quite as much as the Shan alphabet, while a few consonants like f, which are unknown in Shan, are in common use. Thus hpai, fire, is pronounced fai.

West of the Salwen, the principal dialectic differences are found in the border principalities like Samkah (ၸံၵႃ). In these districts the differences seem to have arisen from Burman influence and consist principally in slight variations of vowel sounds, and in a carelessness in the use of tones. Thus ၷွၼ်, 1c, a flexure, is used for ၶွၼ်, 1o.

In principalities like Möng Pawn, where the Taungthus form a large element of the population, there are unimportant dialectic differences, which perhaps should be called mere provincialisms.

Even in the region where the purest Shan is spoken, different forms exist for the same word. Thus ဝ and ဝ are interchanged, as, မၢၼ်, meen and ဝၢၼ်, ween, 1c, to fly. The Chinese Shan and Khamti dialects have been examined somewhat and a few of their words added. Many of their tones are different from any of those in use among Burman Shans and cannot be indicated exactly by the figures and letters in use to indicate tones in the Dictionary. The tone nearest like theirs has been indicated in places in which they differ.

Differences of spelling.

The spelling of Shan words is phonetic and therefore the greater portion of them are fixed in their orthography. There are however a few signs having the same phonetic value. In the use of these there is no uniformity of practice. Books differ, scribes differ, and frequently the same writer is inconsistent in his own usage. There is no standard, to which appeal may be made as a guide in settling the orthography of such words. In the orthography adopted for this class of words, I have endeavored to follow what has seemed to me to be the more frequent usage of writers, although in some cases the two forms of spelling seem to be equally popular.

The following are interchangeable signs: —

◌ဎ	and	◌တ်,	as	ဗိဎ	and	ဗိတ်.
◌ုဉ်	and	◌ုၚ်,	as	ဗိုဉ်	and	ဗိုၚ်.
◌ွဝ်	and	◌ျွဝ်,	as	ဗွဝ်	and	ဗျွဝ်.
◌ွန်	and	◌ွ်,	as	ဗွန်	and	ဗွ်.
◌ုမ်	and	◌ုံ,	as	ဟုမ်	and	ဟုံ.
◌ွမ်	and	◌ွံ	as	ဟွမ်	and	ဟွံ,

In the Dictionary, words which may be written with ◌ဎ or ◌တ် are written with ◌တ် only. Hence in looking for such a word as ဒိဎ, when thus written in a book, the student should look for ဒိတ်.

◌ုဉ် has been retained for all words having short e, the vowel of the open series of its class, as ဗိုဉ်, ken, to suspend, as by a rope, also for most words of the mediate series, as, ခိုဉ်, khin 4m, to wind about, while ◌ၚ် has been used for the closed series, as, ဗိၚ်, keen 1c, to eat, and a few words of the mediate series, as ပိၚ်. pin 1m, to be, exist.

◌ွဝ် is used for ◌ျွဝ် only when the ◌ွဝ် belongs to that one of its three series of tones in which the vowel is ō.

In the last three interchangeable signs given, the second forms are abbreviations of the first forms. Only the abbreviated forms are used in the Dictionary. Hence all words written ဗိမ်, ဟုမ် or ဟွမ် will be found under ဗွ်, ဟုံ, and ဟွံ respectively.

Another difference of spelling arises from the use or omission of ◌ꩻ, as ဝွꩻၚ် or ဝုၚ်, 1c, an island. The use of this sign is infrequent and no notice has been taken of it in the Dictionary. Perhaps in this sign we may find a trace of a former difference in the representation of the open and closed series of tones, for it is used only with the closed series.

In Shan books many polysyllabic words of foreign origin are abbreviated in order to fit into their place rythmically. Thus သံမုဂ်, 2c, 3o, is used for သံမုဂ်တြေ၂, 2c, 3o, 2c, and ဧရ်ယေ၂, 4c, 2c, for ဢမရဧရ်ယေ၂, 5c, 5c, 5c, 4c, 2c, the great western island.

There are some exceptional forms of spelling, as ဝွေ၂ဵ်, pronounced and often written like ဝွဵ်, 4c, and ဝွေ၂ဵ်, pronounced as if written ဝဵ်, 1o.

Differences of spelling also arise from the carelessness of writers. Thus ၵၢၼ္ and ၵၢၼ်ၵ် are often written interchangeably. From the nature of its vowel, ၵၢၼ္, can be of the fifth tone only, while the vowel in ၵၢၼ်ၵ် is used for any one of the first four tones, as ၵၢၼ်ၵ်, 1c, a kind of tree, ၵၢၼ်ၵ်, 2c, to appear, ၵၢၼ်ၵ်, 3c, a father, ၵၢၼ်ၵ်, 4c, if, but ၵၢၼ္, 5c, to strike.

Tones.

5. As the Shan is a tonal language like the Chinese, a nice discrimination between the tones is important. A single combination has a variety of distinct meanings according to the peculiar tone of voice with which it is uttered.

Five tones may be distinguished readily, although some native scholars notice only three.

The first tone is the natural pitch of the voice with a slight rising inflection at the end and may be called the natural tone, as in ဝၢ်, a dog.

The second tone is a deep bass tone and may be called the grave tone, as ဝၢ, the shoulder.

The third tone is an even tone, in pitch, between the first and second tones and may be called the straight forward tone, as ဝၢ, to be mad.

The fourth tone is of a more elevated pitch than the first tone and may be called the high tone, as ဝၢး, to come.

The fifth tone is an abrupt, explosive tone and may be called the emphatic tone, as ဝ, a pony.

Some Shans recognize a sixth tone, as ၶၢး, the polite imperative particle, ꩡꩫ, ꩡꩫ, etc. Some of these tones have been marked (6) in the Dictionary. The sixth tone is slightly circumflex and has a falling inflection at the end.

No signs are used by the Shans to mark the tonal distinction, except (း) which is employed sometimes to denote the high tones as ဝၢး. The tones are indicated in the Dictionary by the numerals 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, the numerals being applied in the order in which the tones have been described.

Series of Tones.

6. From the great paucity of signs representing vowel sounds, some vowel signs have two or three quantities assigned them. This has given rise to the distinction of တိဿဿ်, 2c, 4o, closed tones (lit. closed as to the lips) and အုဿ်, 3c, 4o, open tones (lit. open as to the lips). This distinction recognized by native scholars, does not cover all cases, for the vowel ◌ in closed syllables is capable of having three different quantities. Therefore, for the sake of precision, I have designated the vowel quantity, not noticed by native scholars, as a mediate one.

As the distinctions of vowel quantity in their different combinations run through five tones, some combinations admit of two or three sets or series of tones.

Those closed syllables in which the vowels are uttered with the lips partially closed are called တိဿဿ် or closed series and are indicated in the Dictionary by c. with the numeral marking the tone prefixed, as ꩻ်, keep, 3c, to squeeze, compress between two, ꩽင်, koong, 3c, a prawn.

Those closed syllables in which the vowels are uttered with the lips well opened are called အုဿ် or open series and are indicated in the Dictionary by o. with the numeral marking the tone prefixed, as ꩻ်, kep, 3o, to be narrow, ꩽင်, kong, 4o, a spinning wheel.

Those closed syllables in which the vowel ◌ is uttered with the lips moderately open are called mediate series and are indicated in the Dictionary by m. with the numeral marking the tone prefixed, as ꩻ်, kip, 4m, to pick up or out.

It will be seen from this that some combinations of vowels and consonants, admit of three series of tones, some of two series, while some, from their nature admit of only one series.

The syllables which admit of only one series of tones, for the sake of uniformity in the system of notation adopted, are invariably marked in the Dictionary as belonging to the closed series, without reference to the inherent quantity of the vowel itself. These combinations are:—

ꩫ kah, ꩻ် kee, ꩼ koo, ꩫေါ် kau, ꩽိ kō, ꩼက် kauk, ꩼင် kaung, ꩼတ် kaut, ꩼန် kaun, ꩼပ် kaup, ꩼမ် or ꩼံ kaum, ꩼ' kau-ai or koi,

ꩻ kwah, ꩺ kyah, ꩺꩵ kyō, ꩺꩱ kyau, ꩺꩫ kyauk, ꩺꩮ kyaung, ꩺꩬ kyaut, ꩹ krah, ꩻ kwah, ꩯ kaü.

Combinations which allow of two series of tones, the open and the closed are: —

ꩫ kak, kâk.	ꩮ kang, kâng.
ꩬ kat, kât.	ꩭ kan, kân.
ꩪ kap, kâp.	ꩩ kam, kâm.
ꩦ kow, k′ow.	ꩩꩵ kam, kâm.
ꩵꩫ kook, kōk.	ꩵꩮ koong, kōng.
ꩵꩱ k-wee, k-way.	ꩵꩬ koot, kōt.
ꩵꩭ koon, kōn.	ꩵꩪ koop, kōp.
ꩵꩩ koom, kōm.	ꩵꩵ koom, kōm.
ꩱ k-ay, k-è.	ꩫꩳ kai, k′ai.
ꩯꩫ keŭk, keûk.	ꩯꩮ keŭng, keûng.
ꩯꩬ keŭt, keût.	ꩯꩭ keŭn, keûn.
ꩯꩪ keŭp, keûp.	ꩯꩩ keŭm, keûm.
ꩯ keŭ, keû.	ꩺꩫ kyak, kyâk.
ꩺꩮ &c.	ꩺꩵꩫ kyook, kyōk.
ꩺꩭ &c.	ꩯꩺꩫ kyeŭk, kyeûk.
ꩯꩺꩭ &c.	ꩻꩫ kwak, kwâk.
ꩻꩮ &c.	ꩻꩳ kwai, kw′ai.

Combinations which allow of three series of tones, closed, open and mediate are: —

ꩫꩫ keek, kyik, kek.
ꩫꩮ keeng, kying, keng.
ꩫꩬ keet, kit, ket.
ꩫꩬ keet, kit, ket.
ꩫꩭ keen, kin, ken.
ꩫꩪ keep, kip, kep.
ꩫꩩ keem, kim, kem.
ꩫꩦ keoo, keō, keow.
ꩯꩫ kyeek, kyik, kyek, &c.
ꩯꩩ keem, kim, kem.

7. Two kinds of Couplets exist in the Shan language which may be designated as Proper and Phonetic.

Couplets.

1*st*. Proper Couplets are those in which two words of the same or related signification are used to express a single idea, as ၵီၸ်, 1c, 4o, to be good. ၼ်ၶဵၼ်, 5c, 1c, to arrest. This kind of Couplets has been treated in Chapter XIV of the Shan Grammar.

2nd. Phonetic Couplets (ၶိုသိုဝ်) are syllables having no meaning in themselves, which are joined to a word for the sake of the additional sound that they produce. They are not in very frequent use and are confined principally to the conversation of old women and children. When they are employed, it is generally through the influence of anger, a desire for fun, or some feeling which seeks to express itself in a many-worded form.

The Phonetic Couplet always has the same consonants as the syllable to which it is joined, the variation being only in the vowels employed. The vowel of the word which takes the couplet has an affinity for some one vowel or certain vowels and for no others. If it has an affinity for more than one vowel, generally some particular vowel is in more common use than the others.

Thus the vowel in the syllable ၵၢ kah, 3c, to be scarce, may be followed by the vowel ◌ဵ, as ၵၢဵ kah kee.

On the other hand ဵ kee, 3c, to open, takes ၵၢ for a phonetic couplet, as ဵၵၢ kee kah.

ၵူ koo takes ၵၢ.

ၵၢ် k-ay, k-è may take ၵၢ,ဵ or ၵဝ်, but ၵၢ is the commonly used couplet.

ၵၢ်ၶ kai, ka'i takes ဵ.

ၵဝ် kau, may take ၵၢ, ဵ, or ၵၢ်, but ၵၢ is the commonly used couplet.

ၵဧ် kang, ၵဧ် kâng, ဵဧ် keeng, ဵဧ် kying, ၵူဧ် kaung, may as words, attract to themselves syllables containing each other's vowels with one exception. ဵဧ် kying of the mediate series may take as a couplet, syllables containing the other vowels of this group, but is itself never used as a phonetic couplet. Besides, ဵဧ် keeng of the closed series, when using ၵဧ် as a phonetic couplet chooses that pronunciation of the syllable which belongs to the closed series, as ၵဧ် kang and not kâng; while ဵဧ် kying or keng choose that pronunciation of the syllable which belongs to the open series, as ၵဧ် kâng and not kang.

Thus ဟ် both in the closed series kang and in the open series kâng may take ဗ် keeng (the commonly used form), keng, and ဂွ် kaung, as ဟ်ဗ် kang keeng or kâng keeng, ဟ်ဗ် kang keng or kâng keng, and ဟ်ဂွ်, kang kaung or kâng kaung.

ဗ် keeng usually takes ဗ် keng, as ဗ်ဗ် keeng keng, but may take ဟ် kang or ဂွ် kaung.

ဗ် kying usually takes ဟ် kâng, but may take ဗ် keeng or ဂွ် kaung.

ဗ် keng usually takes ဗ် keeng, but may take ဟ် kâng or ဂွ် kaung.

ဂွ် kaung usually takes ဗ် keng, but may take ဟ် kâng or ဗ် keeng.

These remarks are true of all closed syllables ending in တ်, ခ်, ပ်, and ဒ်.

ဟ် kow, ko′w takes ဗ် keoo.
ဗ် keoo takes ဟ် kow.
ဗ် keo, keow takes ဟ် k′ow.
ဟုလ် k-wee takes ဟ် kai.
ဟုလ် k-way takes ဟ် k′ai.

ဂို် keung usually takes ဟ် kang, and ဂို် keûng takes ဟ် kâng, but both may take ဗ် keeng, ဗ် keng or ဂွ် kaung.

ဥ် kaü takes ဗ kee.

The couplet commonly taken by a word is indicated in the Dictionary by prefixing (*).

A kind of double phonetic couplet is formed by using after the word an open syllable formed of its initial consonant and the vowel ီ ee, and then repeating the word and its natural phonetic couplet. The open syllable is always of the third tone whatever may be the tone of the word itself, as သက်သီသုက်သက်, hsook hsee hsook hsak, 5c, 3c, 5c, 5c, လွှက်လီလွှက်လိက်, lauk lee lauk lek, 4c, 3c, 4c, 4c.

In compound substantive and verbal forms, the phonetic couplet is separated from its principal word by the repetition of the first syllable of the compound word, as မက်ဗ်, mâk keng 2o, 4o, a tamarind, becomes မဟ်ဗ်မဟ်ဟ်, mâk keng mâk kâng.

pin hoo, 1m, 4c, to have holes, becomes ပိၼ်ၶူပိၼ်ၶူ pin hoo pin hah, 1m, 4c, 1m, 4c.

It may be that these phonetic couplets are the empty signs of dead words, but I incline to think that they have grown out of the tonal character of the language to supply a demand for a slightly more emphatic form of expression than any afforded by simple words.

8. The Shan language has absorbed a large number of words from foreign sources.

Foreign words.

1*st*. The Burman. Only those words of Burman origin which are domesticated in the language, as it is used in the Shan principalities, have been recognized in the Dictionary. Among the Shan immigrants of Burma the use of Burman words in a Shan form is much more extensive than in the Shan country. The absorption of such a large number of Burman words is due principally to the influence of the Burman conquest, through which, Burman officials were stationed in all parts of the Shan country for many years. In many border principalities, like Yawnghwe, Burman only is taught in the monasteries and hence is slowly superseding the Shan.

2*nd*. The Pali. The number of Pali words is very large. These have been introduced through the sacred books of Buddhism. Only a part of the words met with in various Shan books examined by the writer, have been inserted. In most cases, the definition given by the Revd. Dr. Judson in his Burman and English Dictionary, has been followed, because the writer has no critical knowledge of the Pali language. The Burman form of the Pali word has always been inserted after the Shan form, in order that there might be no difficulty in the identification of the word. Occasionally differences exist in the Shan transliteration of Burmese and Pali words, but they are confined mostly to the interchange of the liquids ꩡ, ရ, and လ.

3*rd*. The Chinese. Few words in use among the central and southern Shan principalities are derived from this language; but in the principalities which border on China, words have been absorbed in the same manner and for the same reason as in principalities bordering on Burma.
